Suspecting that Thomas may have perpetrated the brutal murder, which is similar to the Kirby homicide, evidently with the same actuating motive, police of the Fourth and Sixth precincts are endeavoring to weave a net around him of the Fourth and Sixth precincts are endeavoring to weave a net around him in connection with the saloonkeeper's mysterious death several weeks ago. Thomas refuses to talk about the Reidcase. It is said he answers the description given of a man who was loitering around Reid's saloon on the day he was dispatched with an oyster knife.

No arrangements have been made for the funeral of Mr. Kirby, Services probably will be held at St. Dominic's Catholic Church, at Sixth and F streets southwest, of which Mr. Kirby was a member. Interment probably will be in Mt. Olivet Cemetery Monday or Tuesday.

OLD KEY MANSION OPEN TO PUBLIC

Occasion Marked by Impressive Patriotic Exercises.

Author's Home Holds Much of Historical Interest.

The old Key mansion, at 3518 M stree orthwest, which for many years was the home of Francis Scott Key, was formally opened to the public today by the Francis Scott Key Memorial Asse ciation, with patriotic exercises which began at 11 o'clock. A pleasant sur-prise was given the members of the association when Mrs. Josephine Mickle, wife of the late Commander Mickle, U. S. N., displayed a piece cut from the flag which floated over Fort McHenry when Francis Scott Key wrote the "Star-Spangled Banner," and which is said to have inspired the author to write the anthem. The reliwas given Mrs. Mickle by her father-

The exercises opened with prayer by the Rev. Frederick B. Howden, after which a double quartet sang, "Lord, With Glowing Heart I Praise Thee," a hymn written by Key. Commissioner Henry B. F. Macfarland, president of the association, presided. Mr. Macfar-land made a short address, introducing second vice president of the society.

Key Speech Is Read.

The double quartet then sang "Maryland, My Maryland," followed by the reading of a speech delivered by Key in the rotunda of the Capitol, July 4, The address was read this morning by F. S. Key Smith, a great-grand-

Many school children attended the execises and joined in the singing of "The Star-Spangied Banner." The double quartet was composed of the following: Miss Blanche Thyson and Miss Virginia Robinson, sopranos; Miss Power and Mrs. Olive R McCake, altos; T. L. Mead, tenor, and R. H. Aftinson, bass. MENTAL CHESS PLAYING.

The archbishop of Canterbury, England, is one of the most remarkable of chess players. During a visit to India he made long journeys with an official who was superintending the laying of a new railway, and the two men were constantly playing chess without a board or pieces. They made the moves verbally and held the game so weil in their minds that they never forgot a move or a point.—Exchange.

cipal speaker at the convocation and nounced his subject as benig "The Protest of Americanism Against Government Ownership of Railroads."

Policy to Govern.

"For a century," he said, "we had existed as a nation under a policy that the function of a government was to govern and not to participate in the struggles of trade and commerce, which had been left to individuals.

"If today we shall undertake Govern-nent ownership of railroads, we will take a step backward, set aside every teaching of the fathers, every principle of the Constitution, and trample upon every tradition of the Republic," said the Senator. The possibility and adthe Senator. The possibility and advisability of the question, constitution, and New England had forty.

Farlier Conditions.

Earlier Conditions.

Senator Burkett reviewed early at tempts to invelgle the Government into private pursuits. He said:

"In one of the early drafts of the Constitution there was power granted to Congress to build postroads and military roads, but they were both dropped. Later on the proposition to give Congress power to put on stage coaches was voted down. Again, some one moved to authorize Congress to build canals, and that was voted down. And the words which we find in the Constitution today, "and postroads," were finally added to the seventh enumerated powers of Congress by a vote of six to five—by the narrow margin of a single vote. "The pathway of the world's history is well strewn with the ruins of nations wrecked on the perilous expedition of mercenary commerce. The Government should be landlord to as few tenants, and master of as few servants as possible. The ideal relation of government and citizen can never be attained while the relation in fact is that of master and servant. So keep the Government out of business—keep it out of competition with its people—let it open up opportunity, but never foreclose it. was voted down. Again, some one moved to authorize Congress to build canals, faced here:

Pocketbooks of today may be stronger considerations than the liberties of tomorrow. But in my judgment both are arrayed against Government ownership of railroads. It will be ruinous in our day and disastrous tomorrow. The United States has never made money out of anything so far-how do you know it would out of railroads has paid in some countries, some years. In some countries, some years. In some countries, some years. In some countries no years, but in no country every year. Private ownership has paid at times in this country, at other times it has not paid. I recall that within ten years more than a fourth dren. Pocketbooks of today may be "The Interstate Commerce Commission informed me that 37 per cent of the railiroad stock paid no dividends last year, and that some were in the hands of a receiver. Those railroads, every mile of them, have ben paying taxes into our treasuries. Under Government ownership they would not be taxed, i cannot imagine a more distressing event to the tax-paying public, unless it would be one of those years when the railroads under Government ownership failed to pay expenses, and the people not only lose the railroad tax, but must tax themselves an additional sum to make up the deficiency of railroad expenses. In that time the people will wish, in terms pathetic and expressive, that there was some despised and sometimes abused railroad capitalist upon whom to unload the deficiency.

"But another question presents itself, would the Government be able to run the railroads as cheaply as private ownership runs them? I doubt if any man will contend that the Government can run anything as cheaply as private individuals can do it. There may be particular reasons why the Government should and must do a certain thing, but there is no reason in the books why the Government can do it as cheaply. The Government never works by the

"But," said Senator Burkett in closthe Government can do it as cheaply, taught us that economy is not a Govtermmental virtue. We boast of our postoffice system, and yet it has never paid taxpenses. Postal service is cheap, of course, at any price, but the price has never equaled the cost."

"But," said Senator Burkett in clos"It is people were not expected to act—

"Granting, as I do, that the first question of possibility can be answered affirmatively," said the Senator, "I am not willing to admit the latter. In my opinion, Government ownership of railroads is not advisable from any of the three standpoints that I have mentioned. It is not advisable constitution ally, economically, or politically.

"Granting that it would be possibe to amend the Constitution, I deny that if would be advisable; or granting that the constitution would not need amending, I am not willing that it should be streethed.

But you say to me, irrigation came—yes, under the whip and spur of the wild West rider who has successfully lassoed the hearts of the American people, and is now temporarily abiding in the White House."

Conditions Not Same, Private capital builds the railroads.

Conditions Not Same.

Russia and Belgium, often held up as examples of government ownership to America, Senator Burkett said, did

"Russia has no railroads - comparatively speaking, and Belgium has no territory, while the United States is large in both. Russia is great in square large in both. Russia is great in square miles, but short in railroad miles. She is big in population, but small in transportation. She occupies one-sixth of the dry land of the earth's surface—she is three times as large as the United States—has twice as many people—and has one-sixth as many miles of railroads as the United States.

"Belgium occupies a spot on the earth's surface about one-seventh of the size of Nebraska, and in that territory lives a population six times that of Nebraska.

"Belgium is about the size of Massa-"Belgium is about the size of Massachusetts, and has about the same amount of rallroads. I submit that government ownership of a few miles covering a small territory, with people compact and quite equally distributed, industries not greatly diversified, is not a very sufficient precedent for a country the size of the United States. The countries that have trusted to private enterprise to build their railroads have fared better than those that have undertaken to develop them by government ownership."
